

EDITOR'S NOTE/ NOTE DU DIRECTEUR

DELETED BY ERROR from the editor's note in L/ILT 11 was the following: We are reprinting the book review by Jacques Rouillard of the book, Working People: An Illustrated History of Canadian Labour owing to an embarrassing number of typographical errors.

Our apologies to Professor Rouillard for the initial error and for the missing English.

LA REMARQUE SUIVANTE a été omise par erreur de la note de l'éditeur dans L/ILT 11: Nous réimprimons le compte-rendu de Jacques Rouillard du livre Working People: An Illustrated History of Canadian Labour dû à une quantité fâcheuse d'erreurs typographiques. Nous nous excusons auprès du Professor Rouillard pour les erreurs originales et pour la partie anglaise manquante.

Appeal for Books

Many readers of Labour /Le Travailleur will have patronized MacLeod's Books in Vancouver. Don Stewart, the owner, specialized in radical and labour material, providing an excellent stock of antiquarian and second-hand books for reasonable prices. He also had an irreplaceable collection of archival material dating to the late nineteenth century, which he graciously allowed researchers and students to consult. His store, on Hastings Street, was a centre of political discussion and information, an environment in which one could browse and debate; it was a place to meet people, to purchase an item, or to keep abreast of what was happening. By a senseless act of arson, directed against a neighbouring left-wing bookstore, MacLeod's was recently entirely destroyed. Tens of thousands of dollars in stock, acquired over the course of the last eleven years, was consumed in flames. Book dealers and sympathetic individuals are now contributing books so that Don Stewart can reestablish MacLeod's Books. Please send any books you no longer need to:
