

CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

Daniel Benedict is a national representative (retired) Canadian Auto Workers. After being a lathe worker and shop steward in an aircraft engine parts plant, Dan Benedict was a union representative on the national and international levels for some thirty years. He worked with many of the people mentioned in his article, in both the US and Canada. This article is based on research for a history of the auto workers in Canada, tentatively entitled Roll the Union On.

David Bright grew up in Bath, England and studied at the University of Birmingham where he received his BA in 1987. After a year spent as a publisher, pizza deliverer and post office employee, he moved to Calgary where he is currently a doctoral student, researching class relations in the prairie west.

Michael Fellman teaches history at Simon Fraser University and is the author of Antislavery Reconsidered; The Unbounded Frame; and Inside War: The Guerrilla Conflict in Missouri during the the American Civil War.

Mark A. Gabbert is a historian at the University of Manitoba.

Denis MacShane works for the International Metalworkers Federation in Geneva and has written books on the Polish union Solidarity, and the independent black unions of South Africa. Oxford University Press will publish his book International Labour and the Origins of the Cold War in 1992.

Stephanie McCurry teaches history at the University of California, San Diego.

Sylvie Murray is a PhD Candidate in History at Yale University.

Lucie Piché poursuit des études de 3e cycle en histoire à l'Université du Québec à Montréal. Son projet de thèse a pour titre: Femmes et mouvements sociaux: le cas de la jeunesse ouvrière catholique féminine, 1931-1970.

Dufferin Sutherland is a PhD candidate in history at Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, BC.

Barry Wright teaches in the Department of Law, Faculty of Social Sciences at Carleton University.