

CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

W.J.C. Cherwinski teaches history at Memorial University of Newfoundland and is working on a monograph on agricultural labour in Western Canada.

Gillian Creese teaches sociology and is Chair of the Women's Studies Programme at the University of British Columbia.

Donald Dennie is a professor of sociology at Laurentian University.

Melvyn Dubofsky, prominent American labour historian, is the author of numerous books and teaches at Binghampton.

Margaret Hobbs teaches Women's Studies at Trent University. She has published several other pieces on women and work in the 1930s.

Bruce Laurie teaches History at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and is the author of Artisans into Workers (1989), and Working People of Philadelphia, 1800-1850 (1980).

Michael Lonardo is Social Sciences Librarian at Memorial University of Newfoundland.

Robert McIntosh held a postdoctoral fellowship at the University of Ottawa for two years after completing his PhD in History at Carleton. He now works in the Government Archives Division of the National Archives of Canada.

Richard Rajala is a doctoral candidate at York University.

Joan Sangster is Chair of the Department of History at Trent University, Peterborough, ON, and author of Dreams of Equality and co-editor, with Linda Kealey, of Beyond the Vote.

Robert C.H. Sweeny, responsable des titres français de notre bibliographie, enseigne l'histoire québécoise à l'Université Memorial.

Christine Sypnowich teaches in the Philosophy Department at Queen's University.

Kerry Taylor is a doctoral candidate at Victoria University in Wellington, New Zealand.