

CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

Anne Forrest teaches labour-management relations in the Faculty of Business Administration at the University of Windsor.

Donna Gabaccia is the author of From the Other Side: Women and Gender in Immigrant Life (University of Indiana Press 1994). Her latest book We Are What We Eat: Food, Ethnicity and American Identity is forthcoming with Harvard University Press.

Franca Iacovetta is co-editor of two recent University Of Toronto books, A Nation of Immigrants: Women, Workers, and Communities in Canadian History and On the Case: Explorations in Social History. She has recently returned from a sabbatical year in Italy.

Mark Leier teaches history at Simon Fraser University.

Steven Maynard is completing Toronto the Gay: Sex, Men, and the Police in Urban Ontario, 1890-1940 which will be published by the University of Chicago Press.

Todd McCallum is a PhD student at Queen's University. He is currently working on a study of the Depression in Vancouver and is fascinated with the early folk songs of Woody Guthrie.

Mike O'Brien is a doctoral candidate in the Department of History at Queen's University.

Deborah Stiles was born and raised in West Virginia and recently emigrated to Canada. In December 1997 she completed a doctorate in Canadian and US history at the University of Maine. She has been teaching history, writing, and literature courses at the University of New Brunswick and St. Thomas University in Fredericton since 1995.

Randi Storch teaches US history at the State University of New York, College at Cortland. This summer she completed her dissertation "Shades of Red: The Communist Party and Chicago's Workers, 1928-1939."

Tatiana van Riemsdijk is a limited-term Instructor of US History at Simon Fraser University. Her research interests include Southern History and Gender History.

Miriam Wright completed a PhD in history at Memorial University of Newfoundland, and currently holds a Post-Doctoral Fellowship from the Institute of Social and Economic Research, Memorial University of Newfoundland.