

CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

Robert Campbell teaches history at Capilano College in North Vancouver and has written much on liquor issues in British Columbia. He recently completed his PhD at Simon Fraser University.

Guy Gaudreau enseigne l'histoire canadienne à l'Université Laurentienne. Il se spécialise dans l'histoire des ressources forestières et minières et considère, pour ses recherches, le Québec et l'Ontario comme un seul territoire historique.

J. Frank Harrison is a Professor of Political Science at St. Francis Xavier University in Nova Scotia. His fields of academic specialization are Russian politics and Anarchist political theory.

Steve Hewitt teaches history at the University of Saskatchewan. He is working on a history of RCMP spying on Canadian university campuses.

Craig Keating teaches history at Simon Fraser University.

Andrew Parnaby is a doctoral candidate in the department of history at Memorial University of Newfoundland.

Ian MacMillan is a Ph.D. student at Queen's University. He is exploring the life of Robert Marshall, an early 20th century American socialist and environmentalist, who was a co-founder of the Wilderness Society. Marshall was among the first environmentalists to explore the linkage between ecological exploitation and the exploitation of labour.

Laurie Mercier is Assistant Professor of History at Washington State University Vancouver and Associate Director of the Center for Columbia River History. She is author of several articles on women's community and oral history, and of the forthcoming book, Smelter City: The Rise and Fall of Community Unionism in Anaconda (University of Illinois Press).

Helen Smith, an Assistant Professor in the Department of History and the Women's Studies Program at Lakehead University, has published papers on Canadian pioneer women and is researching women's war work at Can Car.

Henry Srebrnik is an associate professor in the Department of Political Studies at the University of Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown, PEI. His publications on Jewish radical movements include London Jews and British Communism, 1935-1945 (London: Vallentine Mitchell, 1995).

Carolyn Strange teaches criminal justice history and penology at the University of Toronto. She is currently working on a study of prison history tourism.

Pamela Wakewich is an Assistant Professor of sociology and Women's Studies at Lakehead University. Her previous publications include papers on immigrant women's health, narrative histories of embodiment and health, women's wartime work, and Elsie Gregory MacGill.

J. Donald Wilson, professor emeritus, University of British Columbia. Dr. Wilson has recently retired after teaching History of Education at the University of British Columbia for twenty-seven years. He has published extensively the history of Canadian education and immigration. He now resides on Lambert Island in Lake Superior near Thunder Bay.