

CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

David M. Brennan is an associate professor of economics at Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster, Pennsylvania. His interests are the areas of financial instability, corporate governance, pension investing, and feminist theory. He is a member of the Association for Economic and Social Analysis (AESAs) and the Union for Radical Political Economics (URPE).

Pierrick Labbé est doctorant en histoire à l'Université d'Ottawa. Ses recherches doctorales portent sur l'élaboration des politiques économiques canadiennes et à la production de munitions durant la Deuxième Guerre mondiale.

Mark Leier teaches history at Simon Fraser University. His most recent book is Bakunin: The Creative Passion.

Chris Madsen is a Professor in the Department of Defence Studies at the Canadian Forces College and Royal Military College of Canada in Toronto. He has published widely on maritime operational logistics and military law. He is a councillor with the Canadian Nautical Research Society.

James Pritchard is Professor Emeritus of History, Queen's University. He is a prize-winning author of three books, and has recently completed a history of the Canadian shipbuilding industry during World War II.

Albert Schrauwers is an economic anthropologist whose most recent book "Union is strength": W.L. Mackenzie, the Children of Peace, and the Emergence of Joint Stock Democracy in Upper Canada, examines the impact of the development of corporations on the economic and political life of Upper Canada.

Sid Shniad spent thirty years as research director at the Telecommunications Workers Union.

Victor Silverman teaches history at Pomona College in California. He has worked with the international labor movement on sustainable development policy at the United Nations.